

Marching forward: from promises to progress, women's safety cannot exclude any temporary migrant

To mark International Women's Day 2025, the National Advocacy Group on Women on Temporary Visas Experiencing Violence (the 'National Advocacy Group') calls for reform to the migration system to advance Australia's commitment to ending gendered violence in a generation.

The migration system currently provides a safety net for some temporary migrants who experience domestic and family violence, via the family violence provisions. This is not enough.

The family violence provisions remain inaccessible to thousands of women who are experiencing abuse, despite recent amendments to the provisions.

Many of the 60+ members of the National Advocacy Group work directly with women experiencing domestic and family violence who are not eligible to access permanent residency via the family violence provisions. Across Australia on a daily basis these organisations are working with women who cannot access emergency or long term accommodation, welfare, health and other critical services due to their status as temporary migrants. Many of these women are at risk of poverty and homelessness, and are faced with no other option than to stay with, or return to, a violent perpetrator.

We call on the Federal Government to urgently introduce a visa category that would be accessible to all temporary migrants experiencing domestic and family violence in Australia. Such a step is necessary to provide victim-survivors with the material and legal support to keep them safe.

The Federal Government has demonstrated that it is capable of migration reform that puts temporary migrants first with the 2024 introduction of the workplace justice visa.

This is the critical next step in the commitment to achieving women's safety nationally. Other reforms are also critical: we provide a detailed account of the full suite of measures for reform for state, territory and federal governments in the Blueprint for Reform.
